Senator Ingalls on Civil Service Reform.

Mr. Ingalls said: "Of course President Harrison will obey the civil service laws; he could not honorably do anything else. The republican party is committed to the policy and Congress has enacted it.

"Me? O, I do not believe in the need or wisdom of these laws at all. I am a thoroughly immoral politician, and may as well confess my turpitude. No disguises will avail me. In this respect I am known to be a very bad man. Nine tenths of all the clerks in Washington could be accepted by any intelligent young man of eighteen after two weeks' experience; and I do not understand why the incumbent should have the oil of consecration rubbed upon his head and be assured that he will not be ousted by the party which he opposes. I can hold office for only six years, and then I become an office-seeker and go back to my State and lay down my record and my claims and say, 'Gentlemen, here I am; here is what I have done. If you should acquiesce I should like to go back.' And they put me on trial and weigh my services and decide my case on what they regard as my merits. Why should a $1,200 clerk be exempt from trial, the trial which the President faces every four years? Why should he be greased with some oil of tangere oilment and be made an exception to the general rule of responsibility to the people?"

"There are thousands of men in my State whom I have never seen yet who make my cause their own; who defend my acts and my words; who would fight for me; who would sacrifice rest and spend money for me; who would get up at midnight and ride a horse forty miles to get to work in fluence in my behalf. Well, I am a very immoral politician—I want to give those men some of the things we have won. When one of them applies to me for a post-office at Swampoodle or for a doorkeeper's place in the Custom House or a clerkship at Washington, this high-toned law makes me turn my back on him and say: 'Oh, for shame! Go away! You are a mere office-seeker, and a man is wicked and depraved who seeks office. You go right back home and don't think of such an unworthy thing again, and pull off your coat for me every time you have a chance.' I find it impossible to get to be so severely moral as that."

"Do you think, Senator, that this new civil service system will be abolished?"

"I do not know. The people seem to want it and they should have their way. If it persists and eventually succeeds, it will not be a reform, but a revolution. It will be to that extent an overturning of our theory of government. It will be founding an aristocratic class. It will abolish emulation and ambition and promote that sluggishness and that supercilious attitude towards outsiders that are the bane of our departments to day."

"But while you listen to my opinion I warn you to remember that I am a desperately immoral politician, and that if I were a Custom House officer and could have my way I would let even a $600 man who rolled in barrels hold his place unless he agreed with me in politics. It would seem much less unreasonable to elect for life the President and Senators, who are supposed to acquire valuable special training, than to fix in their places 50,000 subordinates whose duties anybody can soon learn to perform. I am not a truly good and great politician you see, like Mr. Curtis."—Wash. Cor. Phila. Press.

LONDON'S CLOUD OF SMOKE.

Professor Chander Roberts estimates the weight of the smoke cloud which daily hangs over London at about 50 tons of solid carbon, and 250 tons of carbons in the form of hydrocarbon and carbonic oxide gases. Calculated from the average results of tests made by the smoke abatement committee, the value of coal wasted from domestic grates, reaches upon the annual consumption of 5,000,000 people, to $2,257,500. The cost of carriage on this wasted coal is calculated to be $268,750, while the passage of a large number of horses through the streets in drawing it adds considerably to the cost of street cleaning and repairing. There is also the cost of taking away the extra ashes, $43,000 a year. Summing it up, the direct and indirect cost of the wasted coal is set down at $2,600,000 plus the additional loss from the damage done to property caused by the smoky atmosphere, estimated by Mr. Chadwick at $2,000,000—the whole amounting to $4,600,000, or $23,000,000.—San Francisco Argonaut.
